Patty, Patty, pit-a-pat, Grinning like a Chessy Cat, if you don t stop looking so everlasting cheerful, I ll throw something at you! Throw, returned Patty, as her grin perceptibly and purposely widened to the full extent of her scarlet lips. All right! and Elise threw a sofa cushion and another and another, following them up with a knitted afghan, a silk slumber robe, and then beginning on a pile of newspapers. Patty, who was lounging on a broad divan, protected her face with a down pillow, and contentedly endured the avalanche. Then, as the enemy s stock of missiles gave out, she sat up, flinging the impedimenta right and left, and her smiling face and tumbled curls triumphantly braved further assault. It s snowing like the very dickens, Elise declared, disconsolately. I don t see any snow, and Patty shut her blue eyes tight. Of course you don t, you old goose! If a roaring Bengal tiger stood in front of you, with full intent of eating you at once, you d shut your eyes and say, There isn t any tiger there. That is, if you had time to get the words out before you slipped down his throat.
