Excerpt from A Stratigraphic Study of Beach Features on the Southwestern Shore of Lake Michigan: New Evidence of Holocene Lake Level Fluctuations This study of a beach ridge complex along the southwestern shore of Lake Michigan provides new evidence of long-term trends in water level fluctuations of Lakes Michigan and Huron that are not discernible in the short, 125-year historic record of measured lake level changes. Radiocarbon age control of lake terraces and other beach features provided by dates from buried peat and fossil wood indicates that during the past years lake levels were markedly higher and lower than present levels for periods on the order of centuries. This suggests that historically recorded levels, considered high by modern standards, may represent a relatively low cycle on a naturally fluctuating trend. Study results thus have important implications for engineers and hydrologists concerned with planning and construction along the lake shore. The established geological history of the Great Lakes region recognizes three prominent lake stages in the postglacial Upper Great Lakes the Nipissing stage B. P. L, the Algoma stage and modern Lakes Michigan and Huron B. P. To present). The Nipissing stage was initiated when differential isostatic uplift raised northern outlet channels above southern outlets, causing the lakes to rise and drain through preexisting late glacial outlets at Chicago and Port Huron, Michigan. Incision of the Port Huron outlet about B. P. Caused the levels of the lakes to drop to those of the subsequent Algoma stage; the Chicago outlet was abandoned. Renewed incision of the Port Huron outlet about B. P. Caused a final drop to the present level of Lakes Michigan and Huron. Results of the present study provide for...
