Excerpt from Squire Phin: A Novel Miss Lu-ce-e-e had a par-ret, An she kep it in the gar-ret, An she fed it on a car-ret, An she called him J.Iscar-ret, Tidy-urn, Tidy-um! An the par-ret had a feather That was blue in stormy weather, Or twas red, I donno whether, But twas either one or tether, Tidy-um, Tidy-um! - Favourite Song of Hard-times Wharff. The village sounds in Palermo that sleepy after noon were only the summer snorin s, as Marriner Amazeen used to say. There was the murmur of flies buzzing lazily around some banana skins which curled limply in the August sun in front of Asa Brickett sstore. At the side of the building, in a patch of shade, a half-dozen old men, jack-knifed on a rickety settee, droned in intermittent conversation.
